

The Reproductive System - Part 1

Kristine Brown - Traditional Community Herbalist

What Does the Reproductive System Consist of?

The reproductive system is differentiated between male and female.

The female reproductive system contains three main parts: the vagina, which leads from the vulva, the vaginal opening, to the uterus; the uterus, which holds the developing fetus; and the ovaries, which produce the female's ova.

The major reproductive organs of the male can be grouped into three categories. The first category is sperm production and storage. Production takes place in the testes which are housed in the temperature regulating scrotum, immature sperm then travel to the epididymis for development and storage. The second category are the ejaculatory fluid producing glands which include the seminal vesicles, prostate, and the vas deferens. The final category are those used for copulation, and deposition of the spermatozoa (sperm) within the male, these include the penis, urethra, vas deferens, and Cowper's gland.

What is the Function of the Reproductive System?

The female reproductive system has two functions. The first is to produce egg cells, and the second is to protect and nourish the offspring until birth.

The male reproductive system has one function, to produce and deposit sperm.
